Global Asia Research Center

Global Asia Research Center (GARC), National Taiwan University, was established in 2017 with the generous funding from Kim Koo Foundation, Republic of Korea.

GARC aims to promote research on Asian interactions and comparison, and to stimulate new ways of understanding Asian modernities in a globalized world. The mission of GARC is to form a platform for collaboration across disciplines and nations, and to build a network of research institutions in Asia and around the world.

GARC integrates outstanding scholars from various disciplines and fields, and incorporates both quantitative and qualitative approaches to explore the following studies:

Comparative Asia: to compare similar social, political, and cultural issues faced by Asian countries, such as demographic transition, social inequalities, democratic challenges, social activism, and urban development.

Transnational Asia: to study transnational movements of capital, culture, and people and their social consequences in Asia.

Global Asia: to examine Asian presence and impact outside Asia.

Director

Pei-Chia Lan
Director of Global Asia Research Center
Professor, Department of Sociology,
National Taiwan University

Members

The members of GARC currently include 50 faculty members across different disciplines in social sciences and humanities. There are six research clusters: Family, Gender and Population; Ethnicity and Migration; Global Economy and Local Inequalities; Civil Society and Social Movements; Urban Development and Governance and Global Culture; Religion and Consumption.

New Reproductive Technologies and Global Assemblages: Asian Comparative Perspectives

Asia has seen new and emerging developments in Assisted Reproductive Technology (ART) in recent years. These include the steady rise of commercial surrogacy in Southeast Asia and India, the egg donation market in Taiwan attracting infertile women from China, Hong Kong, and Korea, as well as the presence of Denmark-based sperm banks sending sperm across the globe (including Asia). In addition, subsidizing IVF or ART as a policy mechanism to combat low fertility rate and the promotion of egg-freezing among single women coming from the medical community further reflect the complexity of these phenomena and how related discussions tend to roil society as a whole. With invited scholars from Australia, Denmark, Japan, Korea, Taiwan, and the United States sharing their individual work, this forum adopted an Asian comparative perspective and contributed aggregately to the investigation and dialogue of challenging issues concerning ART.

Events Promoting Comparative Understanding of South Korea and East Asia

July 2-3, 2019

The 16th EASP (East Asian Social Policy Network) Annual Conference

The 16th EASP (East Asian Social Policy Network) Annual Conference was held at the National Taiwan University from 2nd-3rd July 2019. Over 190 delegates from 16 countries came together in Taipei to discuss the conference theme: East Asian Welfare Futures: Between Productivism and Social Investment. The panels on the first day facilitated discussions about higher education expansion in East Asia, social policy change in the South Korean welfare state, social investment and gender equality in Taiwan, human rights conventions and food banks, and migrant worker employment and migration policies, respectively. The second day began with three additional panels on migration policies and governance in South Korea and Taiwan, the changes of the Japanese welfare model during the “lost decade”, and discussions of migration and youth well-being in China and Cambodia, alongside additional paper streams.

EVENTS PROMOTING COMPARATIVE UNDERSTANDING OF SOUTH KOREA AND EAST ASIA

7/3 9:00-10:30

Panel: Migration policies and governance in South Korea and Taiwan

Organizer:

Pei-Chia Lan (Director of Global Asia Research Center, National Taiwan University)

Yen-Fen Tseng (Professor, Dept. of Sociology, National Taiwan University)

Taiwan and South Korea share a number of similar patterns, trends, and policies of migration. Both Taiwan and South Korea practice exclusive migration regime in recruiting temporary low-skilled migrant workers. This has caused various abusiveness problems associated with situation of immigration without settlement. Both societies also receive a significant number of cross-border marriage migration, turning into quintessentially multiethnic and multicultural nations within a short period of time. This panel puts together researchers working on recent policy changes in Taiwan and South Korea to discuss ever growing challenges brought by these divergent groups of new migrants.

Title	Presenter
New Skilled Migration Policy in Taiwan	Yen-Fen Tseng (Professor, Dept. of Sociology, National Taiwan University) Hsuan-Chan Hsieh (Dept. of Sociology, National Taiwan University)
Assimilation and Exclusion: Dualistic Control through Gendered Status and Mobility Limitation in Migration Governance in South Korea	Hyunjoo Jung (Associate Professor, Dept. of Environmental Planning, Seoul National University)
Having Local Friends Matter: Everyday Discrimination, Intergroup Relations, and General Relationship Wellbeing among Vietnamese Marriage Migrants in Taiwan and South Korea	Hsin-Chieh Chang (Assistant Professor, College of Public Health, National Taiwan University)
Transnational Ethnic Network of Marriage Migration: the Circuit of Remittances, Mobilities, and Development between Vietnam and South Korea.	HaeRan Shin (Professor, Dept. of Geography, Seoul National University) Bui Thi My Hang (Dept. of Geography, Seoul National University)

7/3 11:00-12:30

Panel: Welfare policies and governance in Korea and Taiwan

Organizer:

Yeun-Wen Ku (Professor, Dept. of Social Work, National Taiwan University)

Shih-Jiunn Shi (Professor, Institute of National Development, National Taiwan University)

Traditional East Asian welfare states used to be viewed as the developmental welfare states which aims to pursue economic growth at the expense of social policy in order to catch up with the Western modernization. While this viewpoint explains the cases of Taiwan and South Korea from the end of the WWII well into their democratization taking place in the 1990s, the two countries have since then trodden in two different paths in response to the challenges of post-industrialization, globalization, and population ageing. This panel puts together researchers working on recent policy changes in Taiwan and South Korea to discuss ever growing challenges for democracy and welfare governance.

Title	Presenter
Democracy, Development and Welfare: An Examination of the Taiwanese Case	Yeun-Wen Ku (Professor, Dept. of Social Work, National Taiwan University) Chung-Yang Yeh (Assistant Professor, Dept. of Sociology, Soochow University)
Changing Dynamics of Social Policy in Democracy: Comparing Pension and Health Reforms in Taiwan	Shih-Jiunn Shi (Professor, Institute of National Development, National Taiwan University) Hsiu-Hui Chen (Professor Dept. of Social Work, Tung-hai University)
Declining Family Support and Inequality and Poverty among Older Adults: Lessons from South Korea	Inhoe Ku (Professor of Social Welfare, Seoul National University) Seoyun Lee (Seoul National University)
Active Ageing Index for Asian Countries: A Comparison of Korea, China and EU Countries	Asghar Zaidi (Dept. of Social Welfare, Seoul National University, South Korea) Jinpil Um (University of Southampton, United Kingdom)

#MeToo in East Asia Forum

In October 2017, US mainstream media, the New York Times and the New Yorker, exposed that Hollywood's mogul movie producer Harvey Weinstein has for years been sexually harassing and assaulting women. Since then, #MeToo has taken hold on social media as a movement to fight against sexual harassment and assault, eventually making waves on a global scale. The movement has equally swept East Asia, although in different forms and scales in China, Japan, Korea, and Taiwan. Among these localized efforts, #MeToo in Korea has gained most momentum, its movement outlasting those in neighboring countries and most extensive in terms of the issues addressed. #MeToo in Japan has been comparatively contained where accusers remain anonymous and its impact limited on laws and policies.

Taiwan in comparison saw relevant media report but few mobilizations or protests for the #MeToo cause, oddly so when considering Taiwan's higher ranking in gender power and equality indexes among these East Asian societies. China's #MeToo on the other hand has been galvanized by overseas movements.

Whereas international media had given extensive coverage to the #MeToo movement, discussions in the academia has been insufficient and, where available, based on western experiences. This forum hence envisions a systematic exploration of #MeToo's developments and divergence in East Asia and has achieved a cross-referential understanding of the legal, social, political, and cultural implications of the movement.

National Taiwan University and Yonsei University Symposium 2019

On the occasion of the College of Social Sciences, Yonsei University's visit in December 2019 to NTU's College of Social Science, a symposium was held between the two colleges. Ten scholars from each university in fields of social welfare, sociology, political science, national development, and so forth were able to interact and exchange notes on research during the all-day symposium.

Headed by the College Dean Prof. Jae Yop Kim, Yonsei's College of Social Sciences has had a longstanding relationship with NTU's College of Social Sciences. In 2018, the Dean of NTU's College of Social Sciences, Prof. Hung-Jen Wang, already visited Yonsei University with NTU delegates to sign an exchange student agreement between the two colleges. Both parties have also assented to future regular exchanges between researchers in the format of December's symposium, in the hope of cementing a closer research-oriented relationship.
